

Welcome

Located between Wave Rock and the Great Eastern Highway and only 3 hours east of Perth (286km), Naremben is the perfect place to stop and enjoy country hospitality and scenery that reflects Australia's true farming lifestyle, as you journey along your 'Pathways to Wave Rock'.

A Piece of History

Naremben must be the only town in Australia to come into existence solely so a pub could be built.

In 1836 Surveyor General J.S. Roe camped near a rocky outcrop which he named Emu Hill because he had seen emus the day before.

The whole area was sparsely populated until the beginning of the twentieth century when land was opened up and farmers moved in to graze sheep and grow wheat.

As late as 1917 the township of Naremben did not exist and even after the arrival of the railway line it was nothing more than a siding for Emu Hill. In 1920 Emu Hill was the largest centre but the local community, when confronted with the possibility of building a hotel, opposed the plan and suggested a coffee palace or temperance hotel.

The idea of creating a town at the Naremben siding was the brainchild of prominent Perth lawyer, Henry Hale and Perth publican, Paddy Connolly. They purchased 30ac (about 12ha) of land at Naremben and built a pub, then sold off the rest of the land to prospective residents of their 'private town'. Although local government was established and administered by a Road Board in Naremben in 1924, the private town status was not rescinded until 1968.

If the good citizens of Emu Hill had been happy to have a hotel, there would have been no need for Naremben. A cold drink can be enjoyed at the pub, which still stands today.
